On the elected officials side, it would be wise, even if it's just an update to let them know how things are proceeding. As long as there aren't any major developments between now and then, I think tomorrow would be a good day for a second call.

Thanks very much. Do you think there is a need for any further congressional or press briefings?

I've now heard from Illinois Reps. Quigley and Duckworth, too. Rep. Duckworth's staff was concerned about drinking water quality in the Chicago suburbs.

Also, I received several thank yous for yesterday's elected officials call. If there are any major developments, I'd suggest we host a second call. The congressional offices appreciate EPA's transparency and access to our staff in the field. They feel they're in the loop and have confidence in our response.
